Cpdt ka study guide

CPDT-KA stands for Certified Professional Dog Trainer - Knowledge Assessed. This designation was purchased through the Certification Board for Professional Dog Trainers (CCPDT). People should be aware that although this organization sounds very official it is not related to any state or federal education organization. The organization first used the acronym CPDT (Certified Pet Dog Trainers) in 2001, but had to change its name in 2010 to CPDT-KA when they sought to trademark the right to control the acronym. The reason for trademark rejection is that they are not allowed to legally prevent dog trainers from using the generic CPDT acronym, which can be used by anyone claiming to be a CERTIFIED PROFESSIONAL Dog Trainer (CPDT) from one of the different places that offers certification tests. Although the title is long and a large number of CPDT-KA certifications are issued, this title is considered not to have much weight in the professional dog training industry. Often, it has the opposite effect because many professional trainers see it as purchased credentials and associated with trainers who have not attended a formal dog training school. Those who carry CPDT-KA degrees earn a degree by submitting time records to prove work experience or help as coaches, shelter volunteers, etc., (regardless of knowledge, quality, or lack of credentials). Then, they pay a fee to the organization to take the 250 multiple choice question test based on the information in the book sold by those affiliated with the organization. The only formal education requirement is a high school diploma or GED equivalent. If the user prints at least 77%, the title can be used. It was first offered during the APDT conference in 2001 where 117 out of 120 (97.5%) people who have paid for that pass test. Because of that time people can pay $395 to take tests on computers in various locations. Here are four examples of questions from cpdt literature with answers highlighted. If you could answer 3 out of 4 you would have a good chance of passing the test: 1. How should dog trainers handle owners with limited mobility? 2. Refer the owner to another coach 3. Train the dog and when the training is complete give the dog back to its owner with written instructions 3. Discuss various options and agree to reasonable accommodation CPDT CPDT CPDT CPDT-KA Test!
